

[AGST #1 RURAL DEVELOPMENT STUDIES: LECTURE SERIES NO.6]

QUALITATIVE RESEARCH METHODS

by Dr. HART NADAV FEUER

Assistant Professor, Graduate School of Agriculture, Kyoto Univ.

Students joining this course will encounter a range of qualitative research methods and learn how someone with an economics or basic social science background can readily integrate these methods into their research and enhance their capability to review inter-disciplinary literature. After completing this course, students will have more confidence about if and when to utilize certain qualitative research methods, and how to follow-up with more training if necessary.

Hart Nadav Feuer is an assistant professor at the Division of Natural Resource Economics, Graduate School of Agriculture, Kyoto University. His current work is centered around the study of skills, meanings, and transparency in food and agriculture in Asia. As a career interdisciplinarian, he has taught a range of research methods in development studies, including economics, anthropology, and sociology.
